EDITOR'S NOTE

November 2017

ne of my oldest and dearest friends lives here in D.C., which for me is not so near, since I live in Boston. (This month, I'm pinch-hitting for this magazine from the land of techies, Tom Brady and wicked good lobstah while we seek out a new Washington D.C. editor.) Over the last decade and a half since university ended, and I embarked on my journey in the "real world," I've made sure to come and visit her with regularity. She's an interesting character and one who never lives a moment dull. With her, I've spent late nights in Adams Morgan, attended academic lectures with diplomats, reminisced over Ethiopian food on U Street before the neighborhood earned its cool factor, and shopped for some regrettable fashions in Georgetown—hindsight is 20/20, true.

One afternoon years ago, while my friend called in at her office, I killed a few hours walking through the Smithsonian's National Museum of African Art. I've been accused of being easily distracted—although I prefer to refer to it as avidly curious—and perhaps that's how I found myself unintentionally standing in the middle of a hanging art installation with two stern security guards coaxing me out by my elbows. That aside, I enjoyed my visit, and it further broadened my encounter with the vast holdings of the Smithsonian. In this, our art and museums issue, I encourage you to > venture into the city's galleries and beyond to many (and all?!) of D.C.'s extraordinary cultural experiences. And, well, if you see me and my friend, these days on a coffee date with our kiddos, please do wave hello.

washington D.C. abounds with rich history at every turn. The National Archives exemplifies this history in the building itself, originally designed to help beautify the center of the city. And then, among the historical documents, photographs and artifacts, it holds original copies of the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution, and the Bill of Rights. Embrace the estrogen-fueled passion in the galleries at the National Museum of Women in the Arts during the powerful "Magnetic Fields: Expanding American Abstraction, 1960s to Today" exhibit that spotlights work by under-recognized, black female artists born in the 20th century. The show creates dialog about the diversity in and of contemporary abstract art through the elaborate, experimental sculpture of Chakaia Booker and the expressionist paintings of activist and teacher Mary Lovelace O'Neal. Many of the exhibited artists have ties to the D.C. area.

Capital Art Beat

Official, commercial and off-beat scenes reflect the city's multicultural spirit. By Jean Lawlor Cohen

HOW TO DESCRIBE the capital art world? The New York Times asked Smithsonian American Art Museum director Stephanie Stebich to try. She called it an "ecosystem" with fringe spaces growing organically like self-generated weeds, commercial galleries purposefully cultivating crops and federal institutions looming like grand green-

Indeed, few cities have our range of "gardens"—public and private museums with rich collections, dealer showcases for local and national talents, co-ops run by artists themselves and independent centers devoted to risk-taking and community.

Official, commercial and off-beat scenes reflect the District's multicultural spirit.

VENERABLE VENUES

Even as major museums respect and display their famous holdings, they pack a few surprises. At the National Gallery of Art, Ginevra diBenci's portrait, the only DaVinci painting in the hemisphere, draws her perennial pilgrims, but fresh reasons to visit include temporary exhibitions (think Dutch Golden Age paintings that feature 10 by Vermeer) and startling loans, like the—photo-op alert!—monumental, electric-blue rooster ("Hahn/Cock" by Katharina Fritsch) on the East Building's newly opened Roof Terrace.

The Hirshhorn Museum, a Smithsonian site for important contemporary art, presents its founding collection and changing installations within circular galleries and a sunken sculpture garden. In the latter, Yoko Ono's "Wish Tree" rises near Rodin's "Burghers of Calais."

To place challenging art in the city, the Hirshhorn has sponsored a large mural by Ono at Union Market, a neighborhood gathering place (Sixth Street NE) that hosts studio visits and artists-in-residence.

The Phillips Collection holds masterlatter-day artists. Its most famous painting inspires an exhibition of 40 works, a "back Transformer co-founder Victoria Reis has been called a 'punk-rock art savior' for her support of untested talents. She says, "staying nimble and flexible is key."

story" of the artist and his circle of handsome friends. Recent acquisitions include a Zilia Sánchez 3-D monochromatic canvas that juts from a wall, similar to this Cuban artist's work in the 2017 Venice Biennale.

And, at the Smithsonian American Art Museum, galleries pay respect to native masters—from "outsider" artists like James Hampton with his "Throne of the Third Heaven" built of scavenged foil, light bulbs and other detritus, to video wizard Nam June Paik with his walls of monitors and spinning pixels. Current dazzle comes via "Lumia," a display of Thomas Wilfred's 1920s light works that curator Virginia Mecklenburg says are "beautiful—cosmic, zen."

Its sister museum the Renwick Gallery, across from the White House, devotes grand spaces to fine craft objects and experimental installations like "Parallax Gap," a suspended visual puzzle that shifts with illusions as visitors walk beneath.

ALTERNATIVE SPACES

"Underground" once applied to happenings like film screenings in urban basements. Now it factors, quite literally, beneath busy Dupont Circle, its park, fountain and chess players. Dupont Underground has claimed an abandoned streetcar station and its platform for up to 144 events this season—music, talks, dance, film and visual art. Shows include videos and the World Press Photo exhibition. Look for a redwalled entry on the circle's north side.

Washington Project for the Arts at 8th and V streets NW has opened a new space for installations "by artists, for artists" like Lending Library that allows registered borrowers six-month loans of paintings, sculpture, prints, videos and mixed media by important artists like found-object sculptor Jeff Spaulding.

MARKET CLUSTERS

"neighborhoods" that encourage foot traffic and draw opening-night crowds. Their events appeal to collectors, art students and, always, grazers who come for the social scene, cheese and free wine.

Book Hill in North Georgetown hosts a second Saturday walk-around. Check Addison Ripley, with a stable including painters Carol Goldberg and Nan Montgomery and November show photographer Frank Hallam Day; Artist's Proof with an international roster plus DC photog legend Fred Maroon and his images of the capital; Klagsbrun Studios with mixed-media inspired by biologic and mythic metamorphosis; Washington Printmakers with colorful graphics; and Cross MacKenzie with ceramics, photography and paintings.

Dupont Circle galleries uphold a threedecade tradition—joint openings on the First Friday of each month. Hillyer Art Space mounts three juried exhibitions a month with Mid-Atlantic artists. Now showing: black and white images of Sierra Leone by Lloyd Kofi Foster and color images of the Arctic Circle by Katherine Akey. Studio, the city's oldest artist co-op, exhibits members' works on two levels and in the garden of a Victorian townhouse.

In the trendy 14th Street zone, three galleries persevere. Hemphill Fine Art represents current stars (Mary Early, Renee Stout) and late masters (Jacob Kainen, William Christenberry, Rockne Krebs). At Neptune & Brown, savvy couple Christine Neptune and Robert Brown show joint inventories of engaging local artists like Carol Barsha and international figures like Celmins, Holzer, Katz, Serra, Riley, Ligon and Marden. And then there is Transformer, where co-founder Victoria Reis has been called a "punk-rock art savior" for her support of fresh talents. The micro project space carries a large impact, and Reis says they plan only six months ahead, since "staying nimble and flexible is key."

Art dealers back the notion of gallery

ACCORDING TO THE sommelier's tasting notes, the Loire Valley sauvignon blanc I am sipping at the Wine Kitchen in downtown Frederick, Maryland, should leave me feeling like I've had a "two minute massage: great and refreshed but in need of more." And the moscato from Piedmonte, Italy, should inspire thoughts of "sitting on a cloud eating pineapple-flavored marshmallows." The tasting notes, which are printed up like trading cards to accompany the restaurant's wines by the glass, epitomize Frederick's approach to food: It's first-class yet fun.

Located about 50 miles from downtown D.C., Maryland's second-largest city after Baltimore has reinvented itself in recent years as a foodie destination, thanks in part to local boy Bryan Voltaggio. The Top Chef finalist opened Volt in 2008 in a 19th-century townhouse, serving modern American fare with locally sourced ingredients.

In the wake of Volt's success, other finedining spots as well as breweries, distilleries, chocolatiers and gourmet markets have electrified Frederick's walkable downtown. Which is why I'm on this Taste Frederick Food Tour one recent drizzly Saturday morning. On the tour, I learn about the city's history and architecture while sampling fancy grilled cheese and sauvignon blanc at the Wine Kitchen, pastrami sandwiches at Firestone's Market on Market, and baklava chocolates at Zoe's Chocolate Co.

Today's walking tour is led by the effervescent Jessica McHugh. We follow her into mile-long Carroll Creek Park, which winds through downtown and also played a large part in the city's revitalization. Four couples are ballroom-dancing creekside in the rain. Water-lily pads form green islands in the middle of the creek, and surprisingly large fish swim just below the surface.

Part of a flood-control project, McHugh tells us, the park—with its footbridges and walkways, gardens and eateries—has become a unifying space. She points out an impressive piece of public art by William Cochran: It's a concrete bridge over the creek painted trompe l'oeil to look like a stone bridge, with "carved" symbols contributed by the community—including one painted by an ex-boyfriend. "He got a job and moved to Baltimore, but I stayed," she says. "I guess I liked this city more than I liked him."

We history buffs get our geek on at the John Hanson House and statue. You've probably never heard of him, but Hanson was the guy elected as our first president in 1781 when the original 13 states were governed by the Articles of Confederation, the precursor to the Constitution (under which George Washington became our first constitutional president). Hanson served a productive one-year term. Among his accomplishments: establishing Thanksgiving Day as the fourth Thursday in November.

Around City Hall, stately brick residences from the 18th and 19th centuries make me feel like I've stepped onto the set of a period drama. Local historian, Chris Haugh, tells me that a travel show host from the U.K. interviewed him once and was awestruck with Frederick's downtown. "She said, 'You know, film studios spend millions to create backdrops like this for their productions. You have it already, and in every direction."

After the tour, I visit the National Museum of Civil War Medicine. With the major battles of Antietam and Gettysburg fought nearby, Frederick was transformed into basically one big hospital during the Civil War, as tens of thousands of casualties on both sides were brought to the crossroads town for treatment or burial. The exhibits display grim artifacts like an amputation kit. I learn that most soldiers who died in the Civil War succumbed to disease, not battle wounds.

Back on the street, I marvel at the number of cool shops, art galleries and restaurants packed into just a few blocks along Market and Patrick streets. I buy a spiced honey truffle at The Perfect Truffle and a bingo game for a kid's birthday at Dancing Bear Toys. I swoon at indie bookstore Curious Iguana. I pass a hipster children's clothing boutique called Kindred and a record shop called Vinyl Acres.

And right before I head out of town I hear music playing. A sidewalk band is launching into a set, part of the city's First Saturday festivities. I may not be sitting on a cloud eating marshmallows, but Frederick is still pretty sweet.

The Michelin Guide celebrates its first anniversary in Washington D.C. By Laura Hayes

STROLL DOWN 14TH STREET'S restaurant corridor and spot canoodling couples carrying pizza boxes with leftovers from Etto, coworkers slurping Virginia oysters on the patio of Pearl Dive Oyster Palace and Francophiles waiting in line for a coveted Le Diplomate table.

This energetic tableau indicates the local restaurant scene is pulsing and deserving of limelight. That scene includes neighborhoods that equal 14th Street's snap, such as Shaw, Navy Yard and Barracks Row—hot spots in a city whose restaurants have earned accolades from James Beard nods to superlatives in national press, including Bon Appetit's Restaurant City of the Year 2016.

One year ago, in October 2016, D.C. added another star to its constellation of bona fides—Michelin. The debut 2017 guide includes 102 restaurants in total, honoring just 12 with stars.

But no matter how much hometown pride the city has for its mushrooming restaurant industry, Michelin is still a game changer. The guide, from the French tire producer, was first published in 1900. What started as a marketing project has evolved into a 117-year-old international gold standard that sent shock waves through the D.C. community—the District is only the fourth U.S. city to have a Michelin Guide, joining New York, Chicago and San Francisco.

The long-term impact of it is that it raises the bar for chefs, and anytime you do that it's a good thing.

It gives you something to aspire to.

"When I was a boy, I would walk in front of Michelin-star restaurants and peer in through the window," said Chef José Andrés, the cofounder of ThinkFoodGroup, who catalyzed D.C.'s modern food movement with restaurants like his temple to tapas, Jaleo. His molecular gastronomy masterpiece, Minibar, is one of only three D.C. restaurants to earn two Michelin stars, along with Aaron Silverman's Pineapple and Pearls and Patrick O'Connell's Inn at Little Washington.

Andrés said he feels like that kid again. "For many chefs, it's a dream to be Michelin-rated, so it was incredibly exciting to hear the news that they are coming to my city."

"We're such a unique market in terms of how many innovative and creative independent operators, chefs and restaurateurs we have in such a small geographic area," said Kathy Hollinger, president and CEO of Restaurant Association of Metropolitan Washington. "Chefs have really invested here."

Innovative Chef Eric Ziebold of the double-decker decadent restaurants Kinship and Métier is one of those chefs.

"It's amazing to be invited to the party," Ziebold said. He's worked at restaurants not unfamiliar to Michelin, including California's The French Laundry and New York's Per Se. Kinship earned one star in Michelin's 2017 guide.

"My immediate reaction was this is fantastic, [but] there have been a lot of misconceptions about what it means," he continued. "At the end of the day, it's a travel guide."

motivating for some people."

As for what delectable recommendations Michelin's sophomore Washington D.C. effort brings, we can't say at press time. The Michelin Guide went on sale October 20.

SERIOUS DINING DESTINATION

Michael Edwards, the senior director of the National Education Association, has been dining in the District for 40 years and estimates that he eats out four nights a week. He uses Michelin in other cities and suggests the guide shines a light on what's tried and true, instead of what's trendy.

"D.C. diners place more of a premium on newer, more dynamic restaurants—the ones that are innovative and take risks," Edwards said. "Diners appreciate delicious food and wonderful service, no question about that. But, Michelin tends to reward well-established, consistently recognized restaurants with meaningful track records."

Michelin starred restaurants in Washington D.C. include Fabio Trabocchi's Italian Fiola, elegant Plume with its classical European fine dining, The Dabney of modern mid-Atlantic cuisine fame, the whimsical and refreshing Tail Up Goat, Pugliese-influenced Masseria, Sushi Taro and its omakase experience, rustic The Blue Duck Tavern, and the no-reservations-taken laidback hot spot Rose's Luxury.

Indeed, D.C. appreciates the Michelin coverage, but the city doesn't need the validation to know how far it has come.

"Eyes have been on Washington for quite some time, and now with Michelin, we've all grown up," Hollinger said. "The rest of the country and the rest of the world will take D.C. more seriously as a dining destination. It's a true honor."

THE FIX

We're addicted to bowls

Local influencers weigh in on their latest obsessions. This month? Bowls—both nutritious and delicious—are all the rage. Here's where they get them.

For more great bowls in the city, visit wheretraveler.com

CAVA

I love that this is a homegrown chain, and the variety can't be beat. Plus, the close attention to local sourcing and sustainable ingredients is seriously admirable.

-Lani Furbank, food and travel writer, @lanifurbank

Daikaya

Here you can get ramen and more. I've tried pretty much every bowl tural comfort food.

-Kate Michael,
former Miss D.C.;
editor at large,
K Street Magazine;
Gtheauthentikate

Beefsteak

With warm bowls, I can maintain my energy without becoming too full. At Beefsteak, my favorite bowl is the Kimchi-wa, which has rice, sweet potatoes, carrots, cabbage, edamame and bok choy with kimchi and soy-ginger dressing. It keeps me coming back for more!

-Ashley Murphy, dancer, The Washington Ballet, Gcocoaballerina

Sweetgreen

The first location is two blocks from my office—perfect for when I crave Spicy Sabzi. I also try all the seasonal flavors when they come out.

-Kate Goodall,
CEO, Halcyon,
Ggoodallkate

The Hilltop Bar & Restaurant

This spot offers a Scramble Bowl inspired by its new brunch mistress, Lia Seremetis, a Greek who hails from California. I call it Greekifornia.

-Philippa Hughes, chief creative contrarian, The Pink Line Project, @pinklineproject
